

I would like to lend my support to the request for comments put forward by the FCC regarding the possibility of allowing the use of unused television spectrum for the purposes of increasing the available number of frequencies allocated to unlicensed transmitters. Some of the most useful and valuable portions of the spectrum are going unused because there are no television stations transmitting on that channel. Why not allow these unused portions to be used by the general public, giving back to the people who actually own the spectrum? This will create quite a boon to the wireless industry and hopefully make wireless access pervasive throughout the country.

Thank you for your time.